Mr. David Mao began taking art lessons as a child. He studied art with Prof. Jiangmei Ni 【倪景楣】 in the College of Architecture and Urban Planning at the Shanghai Tongji University. He also took private lessons from Mr. Wenliang Yan 【颜文梁】 , who was a pioneer of landscape oil painting in China, and the vice president of the Central Art Academy. Over many years of art study, David acquired a solid foundation in sketching watercolor, and oil painting, and gradually developed his own style. David immigrated to the United States in 2007, and has been giving art lessons in multiple Chinese after-schools ever since. During his early years of teaching, David developed a teaching method that well integrates art theory and drawing practice. David makes the art lessons fun by encouraging original, creative ideas and critical thinking from his students so that they may be inspired through the exercises and thus get into the spirit of drawing. His students often win prizes in local art contests. David is a much-loved art teacher who values diversity in his students.
